Family First Community Center opens

Center brings needed services and programs to our community

RENTON IS NOW HOME to a first-of-its-kind community center, with the opening of the Family First Community Center (FFCC) last month.

“Opening the Family First Community Center shows what can happen when agencies, local government, non-profits, and private donors come together to bring a vision to life,” said Mayor Armondo Pavone. “Inside will be a supportive and inclusive environment helping individuals and families in our community thrive and reach their full potential.”

The 21,000-square-foot facility resulted from a partnership between former Seattle Seahawk Doug Baldwin Jr.’s Family First Community Center Foundation, the City of Renton, Renton School District, and HealthPoint, a network of non-profit community-based health centers. Additional financial support came from county, state, and federal grants, and from across our community, including corporate and individual foundations, companies, and individuals.

FFCC is located next to Cascade Elementary School (16200 116th Ave SE, 98058) on land donated by the school district. It brings a much-needed holistic approach to area residents, who comprise approximately 25% of Renton’s population (with 10.9% living below the poverty line) but have long needed more resources. In addition, nine Renton schools serving 4,300 students are within a three-mile radius. A tenth school will open this fall.

HealthPoint will provide medical, dental, and behavioral health services, recreation, education, and wellness programming.

Center providers will offer after-school programs and classes; youth and adult sports; group exercise; personal training; financial literacy classes; health education, cooking, and nutrition classes; and activities for youth, adults, families, and seniors. Renton School District will offer STEM classes to Cascade Elementary School students.
